Deadline for April 2026 newsletter – 16th March

Monthly meeting

Wednesday 4th March 2026

Speaker: David Templeman

Subject: Two queens and a countess

This is not the life stories of Bess, Mary or Elizabeth but an in depth talk on the interaction between the three most colourful and charismatic women in Elizabethan History - Elizabeth I, Mary Queen of Scots and Bess of Hardwick.

A totally new perspective on these women and a unique insight into a predominantly man's world entered into and conquered by these three powerful icons. All women should be rightly proud of their achievements.

Speaker Finder: Margaret Naylor

Fred & Clint

Fred and Clint are eager to come out of hibernation as they have been cooped up for a long time.

Are there any groups that they can join on their next adventure?

I know they had great fun when they went to the National Trust sites and on walks. Let us know and we can arrange for them to come too.

Thank you from two very sad little bears.

Book Group - February

Unsettled Ground by Claire Fuller

Many thanks to Janet who led the meeting and provided thoughtful challenging questions for discussion.

Quick synopsis of the book is the story of a mother who deliberately lied to her children, twins Julius and Jeanie now aged 51, and how this deception impacted on their lives after her death. Jeanie's life suffered most as she was told at an early age that she had heart failure and as a consequence was kept away from school and at the age of 51 could still neither read or write. After the death of their father, Julius was expected to look after his sister and be the breadwinner.

After their mother's death the siblings discover that their home does not in fact belong to them and they are in arrears with rent. They face eviction, nowhere to live and very little opportunity to make money. We discussed how easy it was to find yourself homeless through circumstances beyond your control and the difficulty in trying to find alternative accommodation. They were taken in by their mother's friend, but this did not work out and once again they were left on their own. The isolation of Jeanie from a normal childhood and school friends left her marginalised and unable to forge a life for herself. Her only talent was gardening and growing crops. Julius was also constrained by his responsibility to his sister with limited opportunity to enjoy a normal life although he did occasionally get some respite by "knocking off" the lady over the chip shop.

The twins were helped to varying degrees by friends and we considered whether we would help someone in similar trouble, bearing in mind that their circumstances were extreme with none of the usual hygiene facilities available to them.

Eventually their fortunes change and they are restored to their own home adapted by their mother's former lover to cope with Julius's injuries. It is finally revealed to Jeanie that her heart condition was a lie. We tried to understand why her mother would invent such a story. Was it due to selfishness or a means of protecting her children.

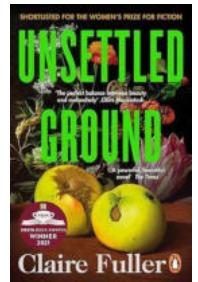

The book was an easy read in spite of the depressing story line and members said they would consider reading another by the same author.

Score 8/10.

Local History

Brinsley Pubs

At our February meeting, we had a fascinating talk with slides, presented by one of our own members - Helen Baker. She used the booklet Brinsley Pubs by Ztan Smith (real name Stan Smith!) as background, and entertained us with amusing anecdotes.

We learned that at one time there were pubs everywhere in Brinsley, including The Jolly Collier, The Clinton Arms, New Inn, The Robin Hood, The Yew Tree, The White Lion and the Prince of Wales. Pub licences which had been required from the 1500s were abolished in the 1830s and led to this sudden proliferation of hostelrys. Understandably, the licences were re-instated some 40 years later.

Gradually, as landlords retired, some of the pubs were closed down. A few were demolished like the Clinton Arms and the Jolly Colliers (no photos have survived), others like the Yew Tree and New Inn were converted into public residences, and three are currently still operating – The Durham Ox, Brinsley Lodge and the White Lion (now The Lion)

It was pointed out that these hostelrys would have been very popular and that miners would be really thirsty after a day down the mines. At one establishment, it was said that 30 glasses were already poured and waiting on the counter for the first customers.

Quite a few of the landlords moved from one pub to another, and interestingly, there are instances of women being the official licensees.

We learned that the Durham Ox had the reputation of being haunted – it was said that a glass of beer levitated on its own, and the beer cellar was best avoided, due to its unpleasant previous usage to store corpses. In the past, pubs were often used for a variety of different purposes, including inquests and auctions.

The Durham Ox

The Yew Tree

Next month, we will discuss Local Business, including factories and potteries.

French Conversation

At a recent French Conversation group the theme was to discuss what books we had enjoyed. There was a wide variety of genres, fiction, non fiction, classics, sports etc. They encompassed all the emotions, love, revenge, loss, humour, and it was great fun. Slow Horses by Mick Herron, Frankie by Graham Norton, David Copperfield by Charles Dickens, The Count of Monte Cristo by Alexandre Dumas, Chasing Jessop by Simon Wilde.

Il y avait une grande variété de genres : romans, essais, classiques, livres de sport, etc. Ils abordaient toutes les émotions: l'amour, la vengeance, le deuil, l'humour... et c'était très amusant.
